A year now always holds hope for improvement of existing conditions and new possibilities of better experiences. It is a good time for all of us, as individuals and organizations, to analyze, assess our experiences, and determine the bases on which we have failed or fallen short in our procedures, responsibilities and goals.

The INDEPENDENT staff, seeing the need for a review of organization and policy, have determined the need for a reorganization. Included in our aims for the new year is the presentation of more comprehensive and pertinent information to increase student interest and reaction in regard to both campus and outside affairs. Beginning with this issue, the INDEPENDENT will continue to do its utmost in the future to close this gap, but it is also necessary that each individual and organization on campus puts forth the same effort.

On numerous occasions, concerns have been expressed over certain campus practices and procedures or over news and opinions printed in the INDEPENDENT; but those voicing this concern have determined the need for each individual and organization to reaffirm their commitment to the principles that make campus operations functional and reasonable. Each person and group has a responsibility to make the Campus a better place. As time goes on, we hope to initiate other columns and features which will be the product of individual thought and action on the part of the entire college community.

The INDEPENDENT is the only instrument of communication which reaches all campus groups on a regular basis and therefore it should be used by those who wish to voice their opinion and beliefs. However, it is the responsibility of each person or organization to see that their views are known to the appropriate audience who can make the necessary changes and features which will be the product of individual thought and action on the part of the entire college community.

Every Voice Counts

The 37 faculty members who signed the petition calling for an immediate cessation of all nuclear testing should be applauded for the fact that they were concerned enough over the danger to humanity to take a stand. They have undertaken the task of educating the campus and society and demanding that their voices be heard. It is the duty of all students, faculty, and administration to work towards the establishment of a world free of nuclear weapons.

Arguments stating that the watts are wasted and effort will be exaggerated present a poor attitude, we feel. The mental tendency to shun issues because of their controversial nature is not acceptable. The attempt to delay the progress of understanding and solving these problems is not constructive. We must all work towards the establishment of a world free of nuclear weapons.
Theater Review: "First Love"

by Robert J. Lithcohn

"FIRST LOVE" opened on Christmas Day, and it proved to be a gift for any discriminating theatre-goer. The play, which is presently at the Morosco Theatre, deals, basically with a man's adolescence and his maturity; his memories and his deep love for his mother.

The Executive Board will select the chairman for next year. The suggested names were accepted.

After receiving replies from other state colleges, on Athletic scholarship offers have been made. The responses have been very good, and it is hoped that all the athletes who have been notified will accept the offers.

I have been asked by the editors of the student newspaper of the Ellisian to write a foreword to this first selection of stories. I am happy to do so, for I have been interested in the idea of a new series of stories for several years. The idea was broached to me by a student, and I was delighted when he suggested that I write the first selection. I have been working on the project ever since, and I am now happy to see it come to fruition.

The capture, imprisonment, and trial of Eichmann is, and will remain, one of the most powerful examples of courage and justice in man's history. From the first sensational headlines reporting the _La Gomera_, this story has had an impact that is unparalleled. As if a great drama were unfolding, it seemed to be composed of such dimensions as to appear almost larger than life. Yet, during the trial proper, the perspectives changed, and the human drama was not only all the more real, but by far more moving, than any other.

As it was so remarkable during the trial was that this man, this mass-murderer, this arch-terrorist, in the most extensive single episode of slaughter in all of human history, seemed, within his glass box, to be so unremarkable, a mere unassuming creature of our species. A bustling bureaucrata, bald, with nervous twitchings, and given to sudden outbursts of vehemence, he looked as if he might be a dandy or a middle-aged gentleman. Yet, from the first shattering revelations during the trial, there emerged unmistakably the image of a man who had made of himself a horror of the world.

Be that as it may, the issues brought before the world by Eichmann himself, and relating to our industrial society of the modern world. It seems to me that this trial not only writes a new chapter in the history of one man's involvement, but it sheds light on the society for genocide, but also it serves to expose the potential for the spread of such potentials within the hearts of men.

We, the inhabitants of this world, post-Dachau world, now face the task of facing anything: any crime, and brutal, criminal as it may be.

And let us not doubt that there are other Eichmanns in this world.

It is clear that structural changes that would be the result of such potential endangers the kind of changes which would allow and encourage to bring their grim work.

Blind obedience and submission to authority and preconceptions, the crimes that lie at the base of the personality of an industrial society, must be cast aside with a better world ought to strive to prevent the spread of such ideas in human beings. For whatever, irrational obedience and prejudice foster, there is the soil from which Eichmanns can be nourished.

A dictator threatens the world with the sword. The savours of mankind hurl battle, State, enslavement, economic and military strategies against the world. The soldier is herded to the battlefield.

Angusted cries of mothers and fathers rise up to heaven.

The stench of corpses pollutes the air. All the earth shakes under the march of oppression.

And the gods laugh at man's blindness.

Players on the soccer squads of the State College Conference have been asked to nominate the most outstanding players from the opposition teams. Three Newark State men have been nominated.

On December 9th, the Squares visited Glassboro to play their third away game of the season. The Glassboro five, seeking vengeance for their upset loss at the hands of the Squares last year, when they were tied for the Conference championship, rolled a 53-39 lead at half-time. Although keeping with the well-balanced Glassboro offense, the Squares, in the second half, made the Newark State defense unlimited. The Giants couldn't stand up to the force of a superior Green Bay team. The victory of the Packers was a double triumph for Green Bay coach Lombardi. Prior to his service with the Packers, he was offensive coach with the Giants.

On December 11th, the Squares visited Livingston. Although the number of active M.A.A. members on campus has been cut down to only a handful, the group remains active. Sophomore Vinicio Merlo is organizing the intramural basketball program, which will begin after the Freshman-Sophomore exams. The gym will be open Wednesdays for the next four weeks, and the games will be played on the social committee, and the varsity basketball team. The program during this group will cover the entire day.
